ENGLAND IS NOT GOING TO QUIT OR COMPROMISE WAR

Morale of Britain's Sorely-Tried Population is As High As Ever

NAZIS MUST BE BEATEN

Some Think Britain Cannot Hope For A Total Victory

(Note: Following is the first of a series of six articles by Charles A. Smith, associate manager of the International News Service London Bureau, on "The Truth About England." In this story, he speaks frankly of British morale and discloses existence of an "appeasement bloc" representing 13 per cent of the population.)

By Charles A. Smith
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK, Mar. 24—(INS)—England is not going to quit.

She is not going to compromise. She is not going to debate, parley or argue.

She is going to fight until victory is won, or until all hope of victory is past.

Just over 40 years ago, the aged Queen Victoria looked over her glasses at Statesman Arthur Balfour in the small audience room at Windsor Castle when he came down from London to bring news of a British defeat in the Boer War.

"There is no depression in this house," she said.

"We are not interested in the possibilities of defeat, because they do not exist."

The old queen's words today epitomize the spirit of 47 million English people as they move into the second spring of World War II. They stare at you in England from movie screens, from the walls of London "pubs" and humble village inns, from telephone booths, from the inside of the great red-painted London buses.

They are as much a part of the England of today as is Winston Churchill. They are the premier's favorite quotation in private, and his constant encouragement when things look grim. They have formed the genesis of many of his historic war-time statements.

VINSON DECLARES U. S. NAVY BEST IN WORLD

Was The Author of Bills For Building of A "Two-Ocean" Navy

GUNNERS ACCURATE

(Editor's Note: Should the United States be forced to engage a foreign fleet in battle how would the American Navy fare? This and other questions on national defense are answered in the following interview with Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and is the last in a series of stories representing the views of the four leading congressional experts on defense.)

By William K. Hutchinson
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Mar. 24—(INS)—Rep. Carl Vinson, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, today declared the United States Navy is the "best in the world," and without doubt can defeat the Japanese Navy if war comes between the two nations.

Vinson, a Georgia Democrat, has piloted naval legislation through the House for eleven years. He introduced the bills that authorized the administration to build a "two ocean" navy.

The Georgian expressed grave concern over the future of the United States if Britain is defeated. He declared the United States safe from invasion so long as the British fleet remains afloat but if that navy was surrendered or sunk, "we admittedly face a serious problem."

"Just what kind of a navy does the United States have?" Vinson was asked.

"I think the American Navy is the best in the world, so far as information is available," Vinson replied. "That includes both material and personnel. American gunners, too, probably are the most accurate in the world. Of course naval information is not as accurate as formerly. It probably is more difficult to obtain information about the Japanese Navy than any other. But we know in a general way what is being built by other nations."

"What chance of victory would the United States Navy have against the Japanese Navy?"

"There is no doubt in my mind but that our Navy would defeat the Japanese Navy," Vinson replied. "Japan's great weakness lies in her petroleum resources. She hasn't sufficient fuel to maintain her Navy without oil from the United States or the Dutch East Indies. "Japan might be brought to her knees without a naval battle, simply by cutting off her oil supplies. She produces but twenty per cent of her oil requirements and therefore must import the other eighty percent. That is her weakness."

"While Japan has a first class navy, yet I do not think that the Japanese Navy is strong enough to defeat our Navy."

Visiting Bishop Confirms Class at St. James' Church

The Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., bishop of Western Nebraska, administered the rite of confirmation in St. James' Episcopal Church, yesterday morning, and delivered the sermon. He based his message on the theme, "Whence shall we buy bread that they may eat?"

The sermon revolved about the meaning of confirmation and also the meaning of the church.

Those confirmed were: Miss Irene Burke, Mrs. Lamont White, Keith Rosser, Jr., Homer Hobbs and Benjamin Perkins.

The choir sang as an anthem "Abide With Me," the solo part being by Mrs. Ralph Hart.

The Rev. Mr. Beecher is aiding the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, bishop of the diocese of Pennsylvania, this year. He also spoke to the scholars in the Sunday School session, telling of the Indian whose likeness appears on the Buffalo nickel. The Rev. Mr. Beecher was acquainted with the Indian who was the subject for the piece. The clergyman was the guest at dinner yesterday of the Rev. George M. Boswell, rector of St. James' Church, and Mrs. Boswell.

Last evening the Rev. Boswell spoke at the vesper service at St. Mary's Hall chapel, Burlington, N. J., and he and Mrs. Boswell and Miss Virginia Boswell were supper guests at St. Mary's Hall.

"Italy of Vatican" Aligns Peace Offensive

By Earl Reeves

London, Mar. 24—Italy of the Vatican and the Quirinal—as distinct from Italy of Premier Mussolini and the somewhat battered Fascist party—is aligning a great Spring peace offensive.

From behind a veil of censorship and secrecy I obtained further details today of the plan whereby Pope Pius XII and King Victor Emmanuel are collaborating in a determined effort to save Italy from destruction and preserve the House of Savoy even if it means dissipation of Fascism.

In contrast to Germany, which firmly believes itself exempt from "blitz" attacks such as England gets, the Italians have been terrorized by even mild RAF raids.

The assaults against Genoa and Taranto, which could not be hidden, had a terrific effect upon Italian morale. From the most remote villages everywhere in the kingdom came a spate of peace petitions. These were not directed to the Fascist government but were sent to the Vatican and the King.

Reliable informants tell me that a week of steady British bombing would send the country screaming for peace at any price, for cancellation of the alliance with Germany, for the overthrow of Fascism.

Although Nazi "tourists" are trying to revive flagging morale, news of what is actually happening has filtered through to the people. Drastic new wartime restrictions are gradually showing them that Italy is losing the war.

In the midst of this dangerous situation and with the public in a sombre mood, King Victor Emmanuel has been received in private by Pope Pius XII less than three times since the Greek and Libyan campaigns began.

British Cruiser To Be Repaired at Norfolk

Washington, Mar. 24—A British battle cruiser will dock at the Norfolk, Va., navy yard for repairs sometime today or tomorrow, unofficial sources said today.

Numerous Calls Give Firemen Busy Week-End

Firemen of this area were kept busy during the week-end, with field fires making up the greater number of the calls to various companies.

A barn on the property of Harry Ruble, Jr., Hulmeville avenue, on the Hulmeville-South Langhorne borough line, was damaged to the extent of $25 yesterday noon, when boards on the side of the structure became ignited from a grass fire.

Mr. Ruble, who was tending the grass fire, summoned aid; with Hulmeville, South Langhorne, Langhorne, Trevose and Trevose Heights companies responding. The blaze was quickly extinguished.

A large grass fire early last evening burned fields in Middletown Township, from Ford avenue, Hulmeville, to Durham Road. Hulmeville company was also summoned to this.

Bristol Consolidated Fire Company was called to three grass fires on Sunday. The one in Bristol borough was to the rear of Bath street; and the other two were out-of-town, one being at Rodgers Road and the other at Green Lane.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

The Way To Support Him

Washington, March 22. THE stage has been reached where most thoughtful men with a reasonably full grasp of the facts are convinced that unless the Federal fiscal picture can be brought sharply to public attention, in some terms related to reality, our whole national defense effort may collapse and a general disaster occur.

PERHAPS this will seem a shocking statement to highly emotional individuals who feel that it is bad taste, or worse, to bring up unpleasant facts at this time. To them the words "national unity" mean a support of the President which includes suspension not only of the critical faculty but also of the intellectual processes. In brief, there is a disposition to think that approval of the Roosevelt foreign policy should make one oblivious to all the dangers and defects inherent in his method of carrying it out.

BUT that is neither patriotic nor intelligent. On the contrary, until we are actually in the war, it seems the reverse of both to refrain from pointing out the obvious things which, because of administrative neglect, involve a national peril.

The time may come when any form of criticism or dissent will be impossible; but it has not come yet, and neither Congress nor critics are performing a useful service by silent acquiescence in a situation they know to be bad.

CERTAINLY that is no way to support the President. That is simply a way to flatter him at great risk.

For those who favored the lend-lease bill and are anxious that nothing be withheld from Mr. Roosevelt.

RADIO'S MOVING DAY

An event of great importance to all Americans will take place on March 29 when most of the radio stations in this country, Canada and Mexico will move from their present wavebands to new hands assigned to them by an international conference for the purpose of clarifying the air and eliminating the conflict and interference which have long prevailed.

The change will mean that most of these stations will move up thirty kilocycles, and all favorite stations will henceforth be found thirty kc. above the present spot on the dial. In order to make these changes the stations are now preparing new crystals and monitors and they are acquiring new equipment to meet the new situation.

In explanation of the change Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, says: "It represents the culmination of years of effort on the part of the industry leaders and government officials to bring about an elimination of objectionable interference that has resulted from lack of international understanding and regulation."

In broadcasting circles there seems to be a fear that the change will result in much confusion, but since the change is a simple one it ought not to be difficult to put into effect. It is merely a slight effort to shove up the dial thirty kc. But many station managers, knowing that there are certain benefits and disadvantages of various wavebands, are more or less anxious to learn how their respective stations will operate on the new assignments.

HE AIN'T GOT NO MINE

Death Valley Scotty "ain't got no mine." He was "just foolin'." Death Valley Scotty's great and good friend, A. M. Johnson, retired insurance broker, wasn't just foolin' when he advanced $500,000 to Scotty in the last 35 years and built that $3,000,000 castle for the old boy. But Johnson doesn't mind.

"He has a great appetite for money, and I like to give it to him," Mr. Johnson explained when he testified at trial of a suit brought against Death Valley Scotty by a less cheerful grubstaker than the insurance broker. Mr. Johnson obviously is a person whose acquaintance is well worth cultivating.

Inasmuch as Mr. Johnson apparently had got his money's worth in the sheer enjoyment of giving it away to Scotty, the presiding judge undoubtedly was thinking of the other grubstaker—the litigant—when he said: "It looks like the man from the desert took the man from the city down the line."

Allowing the judge's use of the word "like" as covered by poetic license, his comment might make a good last line for the saga of Death Valley Scotty. But that isn't the whole story. Scotty isn't merely a desert slicker taking the not-so-slick city slickers for a ride. Scotty made it plain in his own testimony that he actually used his grubstake money to prospect for gold in Death Valley. The only trouble was that he didn't find any gold. But Scotty didn't say that there is no gold there.

Here is how Scotty, himself, explained his lack of that gold mine in Death Valley: "A mine in the legal sense is a spot legally recorded and set forth in county records. That ain't no such thing with Scotty's name on it. So I ain't got no mine."

ECHOES OF THE PAST

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol June 26, 1879. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

John Hoffa, the lost boy of Lebanon county, was found near the railroad crossing at Mill street, by Thomas Clare. It appears he left Winterville, Berks county, on May 10, for home, missed his way, and has been wandering about ever since, trying to find his home. A description of Hoffa was published in the Reading papers. Martin Boyer, who takes a copy of one of them, called Clare's attention to the advertisement. Clare afterward recognized Hoffa walking on the railroad track. In his travels he passed through Philadelphia and several New Jersey towns, and sometimes remained several days without food, sleeping in barns and fence corners.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE
As darkness deepened, the storm increased. Sandra, following her custom, turned on the cupola light before she went up to her room. Although she had not slept the night before, she lay awake in her ivory-and-gold bed, a victim of her troubled thoughts.

Liane had sent word that she wouldn't be back. Her mother needed her, and would Sandra please pack her things and send them over.

Sandra wondered about that as she lay tossing. Affection for her mother was something new in Liane. . . . Was her sudden thoughtfulness a result of her visit to Miss Jacqueline? Or had Jean . . . To break this line of thought she sprang out of bed and went to the window. Outside, the gray, wind-torn world was emerging in the leaden light that precedes the dawn. It had stopped raining, but the wind came shrieking down off the wooded mountains, battering at the window, trampling trees in the garden, and roaring on to tear the bay into a smother of flying spume. The highest tide of the month was screaming almost on a level with the string-pieces of the shadowy wharves.

The O'Moore trawlers, to escape the full force of the blow, had moved up to join Kemp's smaller vessels on the anchorage above the American Packers' float.

The Baltic was riding to a slip-line on the sheltered side of the Bates dock. No lights were showing. No one was visible anywhere on the gray waterfront. Reynald must have returned sometime ago, because his quarters aboard the Glory showed no illumination, either. Naturally—since it was past three in the morning. But—were her eyes playing her tricks again, or was the Glory no longer moored across the face of the wharf? . . . and that strip of water showing between the hull and the piling . . . it looked as if it was widening . . .

She suddenly threw up the window and leaned out into the wind to see better. A low cry broke from her. The Glory was free of her moorings—and moving. Unguided, helpless in the dual grip of wind and tide, the old ship was drifting down and across the channel toward that maze of rocks and islands where the breakers were beating white and high.

Sandra's first impulse was to rouse her grandfather and acquaint him with the Glory's danger. But even as she wheeled toward the door, a disquieting memory halted her. Only a few hours ago Chris Sandvik had said, "Tonight . . . the highest tide of the month . . . wouldn't cannery should slip her moorings and go aground . . ." True, her grandfather had vetoed Chris's suggestion at the time. But maybe, later . . .

She went back to the window. During her brief absence someone had turned on the Glory's cargo lights, making the deck bright as day. She saw Reynald dart out, naked to the waist, black hair blowing. He shaded his eyes with a hand for an instant's appraisal of his ship's position; then leaped to the scuttle that led down to the crew's quarters. Faintly on the wind came his shout: "A-a-l hands on deck! Lively, men! The old ship's bell set up a clangor of alarm. Men boiled up out of the scuttle. Light flashed on aboard the Baltic; and through hand-cupped mouths, Reynald shouted something to Shady Lane, whose huge shoulders blocked the lighted doorway of the tug's wheelhouse.

"Sondy! Sondy! A stentorian bellow from her grandfather's bedroom drew Sandra on the run. She found the Captain sitting up in bed straining an ear toward the window. "What the devil's busted loose on the waterfront, gurl?"

"It's the Glory, Dynamite. She's gone adrift, and—"

"Adrift in this wind and tide?" He flung off his quilt. "Where's the robe? Me crutches? Here, Sondy! Help me swing this damned cat over the side of the bed. Help me get to that window!"

The girl and the old man leaped from the high open window into the gray dawn.

They looked down, as from a box at the theater, on the lighted length of the Glory. Broadside and helpless in the narrow channel, she was driving swiftly toward the tide-covered sandspit that jutted out from Stag Islet, directly across from Echo House.

The Baltic, which should already have been speeding to the old ship's aid, still spluttered impotently at the wharf. "Engine trouble! That does cook Reynald's goose." The Captain's rasping tones held more of contempt for Reynald than concern for the plight of his old command. "His tug can never get out there now in time to save the Glory from stranding on the spit."

"Oh, h-h-h!" moaned Sandra. "Couldn't they stop her by dropping the anchor?"

"No chance. Droppin' the hook there would only swing her heel instead of her head onto the bloody sandspit. 'Twould but make matters worse, as even Reynald must know."

"Then he can't—nothing can save her from grounding?"

"It might be done—but not by that lily-fingered yachtsman! Look now—the ship's stern is still over deep water, her head swingin' round to strike the spit. A real sailorman would heave a drag over to windward from 'midships, and carry a line from that to the bow. Then, as the tide sets the old girl down channel, he could haul her head up—but, that brass-bound imbecile hasn't sense enough to—Hah! Now, what'll he . . . Well, by the horn-billed jeez-wax!"

Men, under Reynald's direction, had hoisted some heavy object to the midship rail and toppled it over, raising a mighty splash.

"A drag!" chorled the Captain. He was heart and soul the seaman again, concerned only that his old ship should be kept from stranding. "He's made a drag from his hatch covers! Just what I was tellin' ye, Sondy. See—they're haulin' her head up now to clear the spit." He raised his voice. "That's well, me hearties! Smartly, now—check the swing of her stern! H-m-m-m. Not bad—for a yachtsman . . . Sondy, fly and fetch me night glasses from the sittin' room. Lively, darlin'!"

Sandra brought the glasses and thrust them into his impatient fingers. "Is the Glory—"

"Aye, she's clear of the spit now. She's settin' in toward the outer point of Echo Islet, just below our banya." He turned the glasses on the old ship, drifting stern-first down channel on the racing ebb. Reynald's half-dressed crew flashed about their work in orderly haste. Reynald himself seemed to be everywhere at once—directing, aiding, animating them all with his vital strength and energy. Sandra, mentally forgetting all else, followed him with her eyes and her heart.

"She'll pass safe by Outer Point," broke in the Captain's practical voice. "Then, with room to swing her, he can drop the hook and wait for—Oh, the eddy!" He dropped the glasses and turned to Sandra a face suddenly gray with consternation. "The eddy that sets square across channel from Outer Point! Once that grips the Glory's stern, she'll go lurchin' across as if the devil had his towline fast to her keel. And there—" his voice cracked as he lifted a hand to point—"there's where she'll land. On Spearhead Rocks!"

Through the gray light, Sandra could see the semicircle of spume that marked those sunken rocks. "That mustn't happen! It mustn't!" Sandra thought passionately.

Beside her, the Captain leaned far out and lifted his voice in a mighty roar of command. "Aboard the Glory! Mind that eddy off Outer Point! Break out your jib, and stand by to club-haul when her stern swings off!"

On board the Glory not a head lifted. Not even the famed O'Moore bellow could carry across a quarter-mile of screaming wind and pounding sea.

"They can't hear you, lamb. But look! Those men up forward are unrolling something—canvas, I think—"

Roosevelt, including the 7 billion dollars he has asked, that will facilitate a full realization of the purpose of the bill, the most effective support that can be given is strongly to insist that it is an indispensable step of first importance to guard against the foundations upon which the national credit rests from becoming unsettled. As things stand, we have soared into the financial stratosphere without any landing apparatus whatsoever. Clearly, unless some adequate program is presented, the whole financial situation is in danger of falling apart before our production of armament reaches its peak.

THE simple truth is that there is today no pretense of an adequate financial plan to support the huge spending schedule, either by taxes or borrowing. The tendency of Mr.

Roosevelt, admitted—and deplored—by some of his best friends, is to consider, after he has won a fight in Congress and secured an appropriation, that the job is largely done. That always has been his trouble. He himself has said that the chief indictment that could be made against him is "poor administration." His interest—and that of those close to him—has been in the thrilling effort of conceiving reforms and driving them through Congress, not in the dull business of making them work later—particularly not in the dull business of paying for them.

NO better view of the situation can be obtained than from recent figures compiled by Mr. Lawrence Sullivan, the independent Washington economist and statistician. Mr. Sullivan points out that when the routine deficiency bills for the 1942 fiscal year are added the total appropriation for the two fiscal years—1941 and 1942—will be over the 50-billion mark. This compares with total Federal expenditures for the four years from 1916 to 1920 of 41.2 billion. The detailed picture, however, is in the appropriations for national defense since January 1, 1940 (fifteen months), including contract authorization.

THESE are as follows:
Navy regular (fiscal, 1941)	$1,493,342,750
War regular (fiscal, 1941)	1,822,571,757
First supplemental national defense (June, 1940)	1,768,912,908
Second supplemental national defense (August, 1940)	4,045,102,532
Third supplemental national defense (October, 1940)	1,450,483,928
Urgent supplemental army clothing, January, 1941	175,000,000
Special ship construction (February, 1941)	313,500,000
Fourth supplemental national defense (February, 1941)	1,517,000,000
First deficiency (February, 1941)	188,672,981
Navy regular (fiscal, 1942)	3,456,457,250
War Department regular (fiscal, 1942)	5,556,600,000
Emergency Defense Housing (two bills)	407,820,000
Two-ocean navy (authorizations above appropriations to date)	2,384,972,000
RFC loans to U. S. industry (August, 1940)	1,000,000,000
RFC loans to U. S. industry (August, 1940)	500,000,000
Defense materials for foreign powers (March, 1941)	7,000,000,000
Total	$84,479,937,106

(N. B.—In addition to above, a total of $13,972,000,000 has been appropriated and budgeted for the routine, non-military functions of the Federal Government for the fiscal years 1941 and 1942, ending June 30, 1942.)

A SECOND TABLE of great interest offers a classification of the principal items making up the total national wealth. Here it is:

	Billions
Railroads	27.0
Other utilities	26.4
Public property (tax exempt)	23.7
Agriculture (including farm dwellings)	45.8
Household goods and private automobiles	68.3
Industrial assets	45.3
Commercial assets	38.1
Total	322.8

THESE items measure the fabulous scale of the current spending program. Authorizations and appropriations for these two years are just about equal to all the industrial assets in the United States, including every factory, mill and shop, with all their equipment, real estate and cash.

THESE assets have accumulated over a period of 200 years. Obviously, no nation can safely spend at that rate. Federal expenditures alone are running nearly one third of the national income, on top of which we are carrying about 10 billion a year in local public budgets. No effort whatever to cut down the normal Federal expenses is being made, though Mr. Roosevelt did say that they must be "pared to the bone." On the contrary, they will be up over last year, and the President personally has recommended a hundred per cent increase in the appropriation for the exceedingly useless Office of Government Reports.

THE more firmly one favors the defense program and the Roosevelt foreign policy, the more disturbing is the fact that so little is being done to buttress our financial structure to stand the greatest strain to which it ever was subjected. It does seem clear that, unless the treasury house is put in order quickly, the entire defense effort may fall down—and with it the whole structure of United States foreign policy. The best way to support the President's defense program is to urge him to evolve a real financial program before it is too late. Men are being drafted for every other purpose but this. Yet nothing seems more vital.

Most of America's oilcloth, 96 million square yards are produced annually, is made on a cotton base, but a small amount is made on paper base, according to the Census.

GRAND THEATRE

"Gone With the Wind," which opened yesterday at the Grand Theatre, is undoubtedly the most faithful filmization of a novel in Hollywood history. It is Margaret Mitchell's great story of the Old South without deviation and practically without elimination. After this has been recorded, little more need be said as an unequalled recommendation for the picture. Millions of readers consider the novel one of the greatest stories of all time; a faithful filming of that story must of necessity make the picture one of the greatest of movie history.

CROYDON RAMBLERS DEFEAT POTTSTOWN

Pa.-N. J. Roller Hockey League
Week-End Results

3—Audubon Southwark—2
6—Croydon Ramblers Pottstown—5

POTTSTOWN, Mar. 24—The Croydon Ramblers roller hockey club traveled to Pottstown, Saturday, and defeated the league-leading Pottstown club by the score of 6 to 3.

The game was the fastest and cleanest ever played in the Pottstown rink, without any penalties being called against either club, and was played before the largest crowd of spectators yet to witness a Penn.-New Jersey League game.

Scoring in every period, the Ramblers' clock-like passing and hard shooting took the play from the home club.

In the first period, play started fast, and after much passing of the puck around, George Ritter shot the puck into the net to give the Ramblers the lead; then a few minutes later, Tommy Keene scored on a pass, making the score two for the Croydon boys; then, as Pop Keene sent in his reserves, Pottstown quickly tied the score, by Groff and Hoff, as the first period came to an end, score tied at two-all.

In the second period Bud Ritter scored for the Ramblers on a pass from Bowers, making the score 3 to 2. A few minutes later Sam Leeper took a pass from Bill Ritter and shot the puck into the net for the Ramblers. Then Schlechter scored for Pottstown as the period came to an end. Ramblers, 4; Pottstown, 3.

In the third period the Ramblers sewed up the game as George Ritter shot the puck into the net from near the center of the rink. Then Bud Ritter scored the final goal of the period as the game came to a close with Goalie Johnson making many beautiful saves as he shut out Pottstown in this period.

Pop Keene was well pleased with the showing of his squad of players, as every boy did his share to make victory certain.

Bud and George Ritter led the Ramblers' attack with two points each. Bowers and Bill Ritter led the Ramblers' defense.

England Is Not Going To Quit Or Compromise War

such as the challenging, confident "we shall come through this period of trial," made at the time of the collapse of France.

They tell the world that by and large the morale of Britain's sorely-tried population is as high as ever as the main belligerents get set for a clash which no one in England doubts will make previous conflicts look like brawls and as Germany makes an all-out effort to drain Britain's life blood on the broad Atlantic Ocean.

Despite a winter of severe weather, of black-out conditions, of tightened belts, of night after night spent in air raid shelters beneath a hail of explosive and fire bombs, the average Britisher, and particularly the much-tested Londoner, is as cocksure of victory as he was last summer and fall when he went into rhapsodies over the exploits of the RAF against Goering's Luftwaffe.

True enough, the average Britisher perhaps doesn't know all the facts, doesn't care too closely to examine the weekly rate of British mercantile losses, and is prone to overlook the fact that German bombers still roar over his island almost at will and drop their loads of sudden death at small cost to themselves.

For him, or her, there can be no doubt at all that Britain's steadily growing air force will again prove the match of whatever the Germans can produce this year, that Britain's ever-expanding army will best the Germans wherever the two belligerents clash on land. He or she feels, much as Premier Churchill feels, that there can be "no talk of compromise or parity," that Germany must and will be licked once and for all.

It is an opinion that is not fully shared by every Britisher, especially by the so-called "thinking" men and women who try to visualize what this and next year may bring. They are in the minority, and they are not popular, but in conversation they will express the belief that Britain cannot hope for total victory, that inevitably the war must end in some form of stalemate, with the possibility of yet a third European "clean up" conflict following the conclusion of the present one.

This small percentage—13 per cent. answered a recent poll in the affirmative when asked whether they would approve or disapprove if Britain were to discuss peace proposals with Germany forms the remnant of any appeasement party still left in Britain today. In the opinion of this writer, they are not dangerous, and do not number among themselves any really influential people, more important, they are not contained within the cabinet, the higher ranks of the Army, Navy, or Air Force, or to any extent within parliament.

Plans Nearly Completed For Firemen's Affair

made known yesterday that the Polish-American String Band, winners of the 1941 Mummies' Parade trophy, will be in the line of march in Croydon next Sunday. The parade will be led by the Police and Firemen's Band of Philadelphia, and will be participated in by the Aqua String Band, the Bristol Cadet Bugle and Drum Corps and the Mount Holly, N. J., band. Fire companies, veterans, scouts and other organizations will help the Croydon firemen celebrate the breaking of ground for their new fire house.

Officials and notables of Bucks county, Bristol, Philadelphia and Burlington will be on hand at the reviewing stand to watch the Aqua String Band drill at the site of the new fire house at Patterson avenue and State Road. These officials also will take part in the ceremonies of turning the first shovels of ground. A gilt-edged shovel has been donated to the firemen by the Croydon hardware store and will be used by District Attorney Edward G. Biester, to start the new fire house on its way. James Laughlin, chairman of the sponsors' board, will introduce the notables to the gathered assemblage.

George W. Smith was named parade marshal, and with the assistance of Fred W. Kutzer, will take complete charge of lining up the paraders, who will form their line of march in Croydon Manor. The parade will move promptly at two o'clock.

The committee also informed the meeting yesterday that six airplanes have been obtained to fly over the route of the parade and drop small American flags on the ceremonies. The planes will then land at the Turnemünde Country Club and the aviators will be brought back to the fire house.

George Sotung, chairman of the committee on refreshments, stated that his committee has secured the aid of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Croydon Fire Company and that everything will be in readiness to take care of the paraders after the ground breaking ceremonies. Transportation for the various bands has been arranged for by Floyd Yocum, who also will take motion pictures of the parade and the festivities afterward.

Appreciation for the exceptional support being afforded the Croydon firemen by other organizations was expressed by the parade committee chairman, Louis Surrick. He stated that he had found everyone willing to aid in the good cause and all offered their services to help make the day a grand success.

Chairman James Laughlin called for a special meeting of the sponsors' organization to be held at George Sotung's Cafe on Wednesday evening at eight o'clock, to take care of final details for next Sunday. The roster for the day will be completed at that time because all organizations and notables invited will have had a chance to reply.

Vinson Declares U. S. Navy Best in World

Navy if they should happen to come in contact.

"Is the United States safe from invasion by a European power or a group of European powers?"

"So long as the British Navy is afloat, the United States is safe from invasion by any combination of European enemies," said Vinson. "With the world situation as it is, our own navy can prevent invasion. But if the British Navy goes down, we admittedly would face a serious problem, because there would be a combination against us."

"What part could the United States navy play in the European war if the United States joins the British cause and declares war on the Axis powers?"

"I cannot comment on that," Vinson said.

"How successful is the German counter-blockade of Britain?"

"The counter-blockade by Germany is indeed an acute problem for the British," Vinson replied. "The British are menaced both from the air and by submarines. However, more ships have been sunk by submarines than by bombers."

"What progress is being made in construction of our own two-ocean navy?"

"The two-ocean navy program, to be completed by 1946, is not proceeding speedily enough," he replied. "I am somewhat impatient to get the program through but I recognize it is impossible to do it overnight. Every effort is being made to build the tonnage but I hope we can cut down the time."

"What is the most difficult phase of the program?"

"There must be a speeding up of a heavier tonnage," Vinson explained. "I am not exactly satisfied with the program with reference to battleships, because battleships require heavier armor and we have not reached the point where we can supply it. There must be plant expansion."

Asked about the historic controversy between the battleship group and the bomber group, Vinson replied:

"I recognize the importance of the air arm of the Navy but the battleship still is the backbone of the fleet."

Know America's Planes

NORTHROP PATROL BOMBER

The manner in which America's aviation industry can produce aircraft specially fitted for all types of military operations is illustrated by the ship you see here. It is the Northrop N-3PB patrol bomber and torpedo carrier. Note the pontoons. By eliminating external bracing, Northrop engineers provided space for two torpedoes instead of the single torpedo carried by other planes. Heavily armed (note the guns in the leading edge of the wing) the N-3PB carries a crew of three—pilot, bombardier and rear gunner.

Practical Hotbed Can Be Built in Basement Window

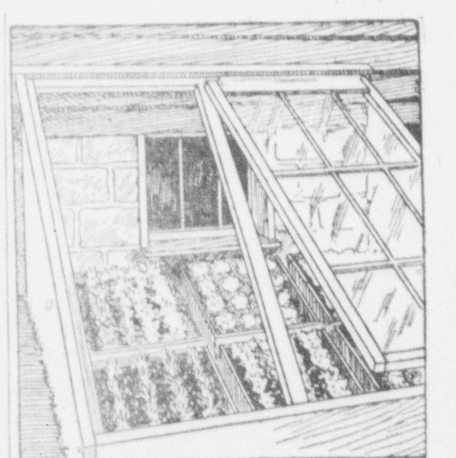

If you have a basement window with southern exposure, it is possible to build a practical hotbed which is more easily watched, aired and watered than the standard type.

In front of the window make a shallow excavation, about a foot deep. The size must be figured carefully, so that a frame set in this excavation can be covered by window or hotbed sash. As in the case of other hotbeds, a glass substitute may be used on the sash, if desired.

Build a frame to fit in the excavation. The sides must slant sharply from a point above the window, almost to the ground. Fit the sash on this frame, using hinges at the top so the sash may easily be raised for ventilation. Earth may be banked around the frame to keep out the cold; and the sides should be as tight as possible to keep out the wind.

The frame may have to be caulked where it joins the foundation to prevent drafts, otherwise it is built like the garden type, using a standard or odd sized sash as you choose.

Heat is supplied to this bed by opening the basement window, and allowing the heated basement air to enter the bed. The window is left open at night, and may often be closed during the day, when the sun is shining on the bed. Hotbeds of this type have been tried and tested, and although they do not maintain temperatures as high as other kinds the heat will be more even, and the ventilation much better.

Hotbed Built Into Basement Window.

What to sow in a hotbed? The tender vegetables that need a long season, such as tomatoes, peppers and eggplants, cabbage and cauliflower, a few cucumbers or summer squash in pots sunk into the earth so they may be transplanted readily, all may be started here.

Most of the annual flowers will benefit from an early start here if you do not plan to put them in the cold frame, otherwise use the hotbed only for the tender or slow ones.

The main things to watch are temperature, and drafts. Ventilation is necessary on warm days, and for very short periods on cooler days. Sow seed thinly and water bed moderately when planting; thin out when needed.
